

I am from a small town in Arkansas that historically had a wonderful diversity of radio ownership. Now, the conglomerates have moved in. This morning I heard a woman win a contest -- it was a 'nationwide' contest to increase the winnings. But the woman had no connection to our community. Who are these people?

Please encourage more small broadcasters by allotting more of the public's airwaves to independently owned businesses. Not only should there be a limit to the number of media sources one company can own in a location -- I feel there should be a large section of the radio dial set aside specifically for single source broadcasters (not part of a conglomerate or attached to another media source in the community).
